

Self-nosodes in radionics

Only the spear that struck it heals the wound (from the opera "Parzival")

The homeopathic principle assumes that for every given pathological vibration, the exactly opposite vibration must be found, in order to heal or at least bring about relief. In addition to the classical homeopathic selection of methods, there is now a new way towards this goal: the production of self-nosodes by means of radionics.

Nosodes produced from a disease (e.g. breast cancer nosode – carcinosinum), which are purchased from a chemist, are produced from the disease of a person suffering from this disease. The problem in this case is that there can be completely different reasons for the contraction of breast cancer. Since homeopathic exponentiation produces an inverse vibration, which can act as a curative agent for the relevant disease, the nosode from the breast cancer tissue of another woman would not therefore provide some women with the information required for healing.

In order to be able to explain this more clearly, let us consider the method of action of homeopathic exponentiation using the example of arsenic: in people who have poisoned themselves acutely with it, arsenic produces amongst other things salivation, vomiting, diarrhoea, cramps, cold feet and hands, tachycardia, severe angina pectoris and mortal fear. Through homeopathic exponentiation, a curative agent is produced from the poison arsenic, which in a patient demonstrating similar symptoms (simile), although without having been poisoned with arsenic, can then cure those symptoms which the poison would have triggered in the original tincture. In this way, every disease carries in itself the potential for its own healing; this potential simply needs to be released by homeopathic exponentiation.

In the same way, the cure for exactly this type of cancer can be produced from the cancer tissue of a female breast by exponentiation (carcinosinum). Breast cancer however is not automatically breast cancer in terms of its genesis.

While it is impossible to know with purchased agents whether the breast cancer of the tissue processed to make the medication is similar enough to that of the patient in question, this can naturally be excluded when producing nosodes from the patient's own tissue.

This principle has also been applied previously in naturopathy; in the production of own urine and own blood nosodes. The production of self-nosodes from pathological tissue however would be very complex, and certainly unaffordable for many patients.

And this is where radionics comes into play:

In radionics, advantage is taken of the fact that the image of an object contains the same vibrations / information as the object itself. Or to put it another way: the ultrasound or CT image of breast cancer tissue contains the same information as the tissue itself. Modern radionics devices in the hands of therapists are now in a position to exponentiate images, thereby enabling the production of self-nosodes in the simplest way possible.

The production process of such nosodes, in accordance with the laws of psycho-biophysics should be understood not as a technical, but as a mental process. This is ultimately a matter of consciousness technology, which is completely separate from the medication, but can still develop its effect in the sense of mental healing processes.

In a similar way as the green thumb, in which it is not a matter of chemical, pharmacological or technical processes, this initiates in the human

Fig. 2: The ultrasound image of a tumour contains all the information (in homeopathic terms: vibrations) of the tumour itself. It also contains the information on emotions which have led to this tumour. (Every masseur will confirm that the removal of blockages can also release the emotions which have led to their formation.) A nosode is also not only organically effective, but also helpful in the dissolution of the incorrect psychic attitude(s) which promoted the formation of the tumour.

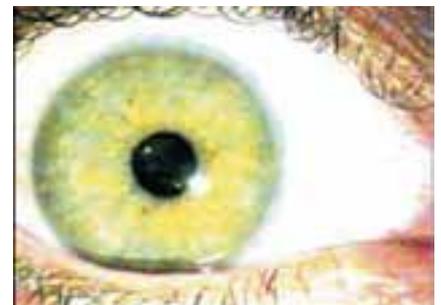

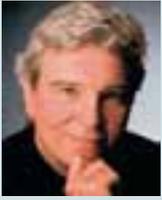

Fig. 3: In biochemical diagnostics, this eye is referred to as a case of uric acid diathesis. The kidneys are not sufficiently fulfilling their task of filtering out the urea substances, resulting in these being deposited in the connective tissue, which is also referred to medically as the "pronephros". This patient has not yet developed any noticeable symptoms, such as gout. This is however already visible from the eye, therefore offering in this case the possibility of applying a "uric acid nosode" to trigger all processes as far as the kidneys which could lead to the physiological excretion of the uric acids. As already mentioned, this addresses not only the organic dysfunctions, but also the supraordinate subjects of the kidneys, which originally caused the metabolic disturbance: fear, communication and the ability to let go of things which are no longer needed.

body a process which one cannot understand in the truest sense of the word – and unfortunately many people cannot understand it for exactly this reason.

Instrumental biocommunication, which originated from radionics, which has in the meantime come of age, takes advantage of these mechanisms and communicates the information of the self-nosodes by turning the device into the extended arm of the consciousness of the therapist. Emoto was able to demonstrate impressively with his ice crystals that these consciousness processes really bring about changes, and in practices in which instrumental biocommunication is used as a method, this is no longer an issue on empirical grounds alone.

Radionics and above all instrumental biocommunication, in the case of devices used in naturopathy, have in the meantime become the legitimate successors to electro-acupuncture and bioresonance devices. Their use is currently spreading more quickly than any other method – and at the worldwide level, even though the approach conflicts with the prevailing doctrines of the natural sciences.

An understanding of these procedures demands a deep insight into the true relationships between biological systems. Quantum physics has long since shown us that everything is completely different, and that space and time in the microcosm are subject to entirely different laws.

Quantum physics contradicts our human logic. The fact that devices which work according to the principles of quantum physics also appear to contradict logic should therefore not prevent anyone from working with them.
